The effects of three culture media (TCM-199 supplemented with or without 10% porcine follicular fluid (pFF), synthetic oviduct fluid (SOF), and TCM-199 supplemented with 10% pFF and 300 mM sucrose or 200 mM mannitol) and three temperatures (37, 39, and 41 degrees C) on the in vitro maturation of porcine cumulus-enclosed oocytes were studied. Oocytes were recovered from the ovaries of prepubertal gilts. For each experiment, three replicate dishes of 3 or 4 oocytes each were cultured for each treatment. Maturation rates were recorded after 24 hr of culture. After maturation, oocytes were fixed and prepared for light microscopy. Oocytes were classified according to the percentage of germinal vesicle breakdown (GVBD). All three media supported the maturation of porcine cumulus-enclosed oocytes. The addition of pFF or sucrose to TCM-199 at a concentration of 10% had no effect on oocyte maturation. The addition of either sucrose or mannitol to TCM-199 plus pFF
